

Read like an...

Economist

Check the reliability of your sources

Do you know the source of the economic information you are reading? In a world of fake news and misinformation, it is more important than ever to check and cross-reference source material.

Look for key economic vocabulary

Do you know what all the key terms mean? Review them regularly to improve your understanding?

Interpret data, charts and diagrams carefully

What is the data showing? What can be inferred from the data? Does the data uphold what you know based on your learning and understanding of economics?

Look for links with things you know from the real world

Does this help you to understand the analysis on news programmes and in newspapers? Having learnt some economics, does this prior knowledge help you to make sense of the world?

